

In the words of OHRP, "Publishing something does not make it research and not publishing something does not make it research. Research is a process that is designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events." Research is a process designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events.

Research is a process designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events. Research is a process designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events.

Research is a process designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events.

x An oral history or journalistic piece that is limited to documenting or reporting on specific people, events, or places in specific contexts. Research is a process designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events.

x Classes, independent studies, and honors projects that are being conducted for training purposes. Research is a process designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events.

Research is a process designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events. Research is a process designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events.