— whia person is made to think about death, known as mortality salience

(MS) (Goldenberg et al., 2001; Lambert et al., 2014.) To examine these differences, we had participants report their spider and m6Mm6M condition from the rest of the analysis. We also chose to exclude disgust of death and injection items from our analyses because these are close enough to the MS prime and BII fears—any results could therefore be considered more of a confirmation of the prime and not a result thereof. Following this exclusion, we found that participants high in spider and BII fear did show significantly more disgust; however, no
